Jesus had His cross, you have yours, and I have mine. It is easy to promote His; it is also easy to neglect yours and mine. If we do not accept ours, we cannot possess His. Unless we take up our crosses, His is in vain as far as our lives are concerned. I may not be able to change the world, but God can change me. No one can walk the path of righteousness for me. I must sacrifice the “Big Me” to receive the “Great He.” The absolute good in me is Christ in me (Galatians 2:20, 21). On the cross Jesus died not only instead of us, but also for us.

We, too, die, suffer, and carry our crosses. He bore His; we also must bear ours. We have the gift of grace, but we also must have good works. Grace is not earned, but it demands our efforts. Salvation can never be “Come in, Savior, but stay out, Lord.” Martin Luther King, Jr., well said, “The cross we bear precedes the crown we
A cross around your neck can never substitute for a cross on your back.

There is no “cheap grace,” and there are no cheap crosses. It is easy to be tolerant, but it is costly to practice true Christian love.

Let us keep going back to the text: “If anyone wishes to come after Me, he must deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow Me” (Luke 9:23; see Matthew 16:24; Mark 8:34). What does it mean to take up my cross?

1) My cross is exclusive. The command to take up a cross could be one of the greatest demands Jesus ever made. His condition is dogmatic, intolerant, mandatory, and eternally vital. Jesus said you are either “in” or “out.” He gave no “ifs, ands, or buts.” He said, “Whoever does not carry his own cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple” (Luke 14:27). He said, “So then, none of you can be My disciple who does not give up all his own possessions” (Luke 14:33). The cross calls for death. We must die to self, sin, and society. Crosses are costly. Basically, we have only three problems: “me, myself, and I.” We must die to all three! Superficial views of the cross result in weak Christians. We cannot compromise the cross. The Christian life is not always easy and happy. Will we pay the price? Will we die to ourselves? Will we give up our rights to ourselves? Jesus is Lord. We must admit to being lost sinners and put our obedient faith in Him.

We know we need to believe in God. We also need to know that God believes in us. The power to live the Epistles is found in the story of the cross in the Gospels. We are pardoned—not paroled. We are not saved to live as convicts. We must never forget that God lives in us “to will and to work for His good pleasure” (Philippians 2:13). Christians must become vessels of honor (2 Timothy 2:20, 21). All of us must develop and maintain our own individual relationships with God. We cannot afford to live in doubt and visit our faith. We must live in faith and abandon our doubt.

(2) My cross is daily. “Ouch!” Daily? Christianity is a life—not a moment. Paul tersely said, “. . . I die daily” (1 Corinthians 15:31). Life is daily—and so is Christianity. We need daily bread (Matthew 6:11) and daily spiritual bread (Acts 17:11; Hebrews 3:13). The early church had daily additions (Acts 2:47; 16:5). A sinner, in order to receive salvation, must die to himself and take up his cross daily. These are two separate actions, not one. Do not confuse “self-denial” with “cross-bearing.”

We need fresh forgiveness daily. Yesterday’s forgiveness is not for today or tomorrow. We do not die once in conversion and stay dead. Daily death is a daily choice. We are to be Christians who are daily living a crucified life with Christ. As Christians, we . . .

. . . are facing only one direction.
. . . can never turn back.
. . . no longer have plans of our own.
. . . have minds through which Christ thinks.
. . . have hearts through which Christ loves.
. . . have voices through which Christ speaks.
. . . have bodies through which Christ serves.

Carry your cross until you find someone who needs it more than you do—then give it to him. (You never will.)

(3) My cross is not one of my many burdens. Too many think, “This burden must be my cross to bear.” Jesus said
“cross,” not “crosses.” A cross is something we “take up,” not something we “put up with.” This kind of thinking reduces Christians to victims. Galatians 2:20, 21 is the most “self-filled” text in the Scriptures; it is also the most “self-surrendered” text in the Scriptures. Eight personal pronouns are used in the passage. “I” appears five times; “me” appears three. What is the great paradox? Self-crucifixion allows true life. One can neither kill nor hurt a dead man. Some of us are not totally dead. The man who has died to everything has the ability to give up anything. The Christian has to die before he can serve.

(4) My cross is not misery or sadistic martyrdom. My cross represents joy, not pessimistic “doom and gloom” (see John 15:11–14; Romans 14:17; 15:13; Hebrews 12:2; James 1:2; 1 John 1:4; 3 John 4). Sadly, we know about guilt, but we do not know about grace and gratitude. Do not teach self-sacrifice without joy. Do not reduce the gospel message to stoicism. Taking up the cross is positive, not negative; it is joyous, not miserable. It results in victorious living, not neurotic martyrdom. We are called to live in the “forgiveness of God.”

(5) My cross is accepting forgiveness and sharing salvation with others. To take up my cross is to live forgiven, to forgive others, and to die to self so that I might teach and serve others (see 1 John 3:16–18). The cross is our call to forgive others. We cannot receive what we refuse to give. Until one accepts grace, he cannot learn mercy.

Each person “writes his own book on the cross” as he decides how he will respond to Jesus’ sacrifice. I have written mine; now write yours!

The cross . . .
there is no other way!
